5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MATT BURKE, SPORTS EDITOR

The Celtics have thrived off the TD Garden crowd all postseason as the C's are a remarkable 9-0 at home in these playoffs. Their toughest challenge to date in Boston will be LeBron's Cavaliers tonight, though, as the Cavs look like they've solved the Celtics' riddle. At least these late starts (8:40 tip off) should help fuel the crowd, as the pre-gaming on Canal Street should be phenomenal. That liquid energy could very well propel the C's to yet another home playoff victory. Read more on page 13 and at metroboston.us.

1 TRUMP CASTS DOUBT ON NORTH KOREA SUMMIT

President Donald Trump said on Tuesday there was a "substantial chance" his summit with North Korean leader Kim Jong Un will not take place as planned on June 12 amid concerns that Kim is resistant to giving up his nuclear weapons. Trump raised doubts about the Singapore summit in talks with South Korean President Moon Jae-in, who came to Washington to urge Trump not to let a rare opportunity with reclusive North Korea slip away. If the summit is called off or fails, it would be a major blow to what Trump supporters hope will be the biggest diplomatic achievement of his presidency, and a huge disappointment for the president himself. "There's a very substantial chance ... it won't work out. And that's OK," Trump told reporters. "That doesn't mean it won't work out over a period of time. But it may not work out for June 12. But there is a good chance that we'll have the meeting." Trump said whether the meeting will be held as scheduled will be determined "pretty soon." "North Korea has a chance to be a great country and I think they should seize the opportunity," he said.

2 REPUBS ONLY INVITED TO SEE CLASSIFIED DOCS

Two Republican lawmakers, and no Democrats, are expected to attend a meeting scheduled for Thursday to review classified information relating to President Donald Trump's suggestion the FBI might have used an informant to gather information on his 2016 election campaign, the White House said on Tuesday. Trump's closest conservative allies in Congress have been clamoring for access to the classified documents. The lawmakers have accused the FBI and Department of Justice of political bias against Trump in favor of Democratic former Secretary of State Hillary Clinton during his successful presidential campaign. The meeting attendees will be Representatives Devin Nunes, chairman of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, and Trey Gowdy, chairman of the House Oversight Committee, White House spokesman Sarah Sanders told the daily news briefing. FBI Director Christopher Wray, Director of National Intelligence Dan Coats and Acting Principal Associate Deputy Attorney General Ed O'Callaghan are also expected to attend, she said.

4 SENATORS URGE TRUMP TO TAKE HARD LINE ON CHINA

At least 27 of the 100 U.S. senators, both Democrats and President Donald Trump's fellow Republicans, urged his administration on Tuesday not to soften restrictions on the transfer of U.S. technology to China. "There can be no question that China seeks to surpass the U.S. both economically and militarily and become the world's foremost superpower, and neither the federal government nor private U.S. companies should aid and abet that effort," the senators said in a letter, whose signatories included Chuck Schumer, the top Senate Democrat, and John Cornyn, the No. 2 Republican. President Trump said he was not pleased with the recent U.S.-China trade talks, which he said "were a start" and that there was no deal with China on ZTE Corp. Trump has adopted a more conciliatory stance in the China talks as North Korea has called into question a summit planned for next month. The president's comments come after Treasury Secretary Steven Mnuchin said that the two countries had put the prospect of a trade war "on hold" and agreed to hold more talks to boost U.S. exports to China.

5 MCDONALD'S HIT WITH NEW HARASSMENT CLAIMS

Ten women who work at McDonald's restaurants in Detroit, Chicago, Los Angeles and six other cities have filed sexual harassment complaints in the past few days with the federal government against the company and its franchisees, which they said ignored or retaliated against them for such complaints. The complaints, filed with the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), are the latest effort by the union-backed Fight for $15 to have McDonald's designated a "joint employer" of workers at McDonald's franchises and thereby liable when its franchisees violate labor laws. The claimants, including a 15-year-old from St. Louis, said in a conference call with journalists that they were ignored, mocked or terminated for reporting the behavior. The accusations included claims that co-workers or supervisors sexually propositioned, groped or exposed themselves to the women. "I felt I had no choice but to tolerate it," Kimberley Lawson, 25, who makes $8.75 per hour at a McDonald's in Kansas City, Missouri, said on a conference call with reporters.

MBTA to offer reduced weekend commuter rail fares this summer

These special MBTA fares for the commuter rail get you unlimited travel over a weekend for just $10.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Special summer MBTA fares let you take unlimited commuter rail trips in one weekend for just $10. WIKIMEDIA COMMONS

"There is plenty of capacity on our weekend trains, and we'd be happy to fill those seats with families and others traveling in and out of Boston this summer."
MBTA General Manager Luis Manuel Ramírez

Summer is the time for weekend getaways, and the commuter rail can connect you to spots across Massachusetts. But if you don't want to spend all your vacation money on MBTA fares, take note of their latest summer deal.

The MBTA commuter rail announced this week that there will be a special weekend fare throughout the summer. For $10, you can get unlimited travel through all commuter rail zones on Saturdays and Sundays, beginning June 9.

These special MBTA fares apply to all commuter rail trains, but the CapeFLYER is not included in this offer.

The all-weekend fares are part of a pilot program that will go until Sept. 2.

"We look forward to testing this pilot program as we work to determine if there is an untapped market for weekend commuter rail service," said MBTA General Manager Luis Manuel Ramírez in a statement. "There is plenty of capacity on our weekend trains, and we'd be happy to fill those seats with families and others traveling in and out of Boston this summer."

The MBTA commuter rail is crowded during the week as riders take the trains to work, but on weekends, many seats on the commuter rail are open. This pilot program, the transit agency said, is meant to encourage people to try the commuter rail on the weekend, and to help the MBTA learn more about ridership demand and get some customer feedback.

Plus, if you don't want to sit in summer beach traffic, the MBTA commuter rail can take you to getaways like Rockport. Usually, the MBTA fare from North Station to Rockport would cost $23 round-trip, but with this offer, unlimited travel on the commuter rail is only $10.

These summer MBTA fares cover all weekend commuter rail trains from the first scheduled Saturday trip to the last scheduled Sunday trip, the transit agency said. The $10 fare is available on the mTicket app, onboard trains and at ticket windows at North, South and Back Bay Stations.

Apple and Perkins School for the Blind partner to teach kids how to code

To Apple, the world of technology should be accessible to everyone, and that's why the company is partnering with Perkins School for the Blind in Watertown to teach kids how to code.

The tech giant has an initiative called Everyone Can Code, which includes a curriculum meant to bring the skill of computer coding to students of all ages through the iPad app Swift Playgrounds. Now, Apple is teaming up with schools that serve the blind and deaf communities to ensure that they aren't left out of the coding conversation.

Perkins School for the Blind is one of eight participating schools across the country (and the only one in New England) to partner with Apple to teach kids how to code, no matter the visual (or auditory) barriers they may have previously faced.

As the world turns more technical every day, coding is the language that lets people solve problems by creating programs, apps and more. By offering this skill to blind students at Perkins, said Superintendent Ed Bosso, it's making the world of technology that much more accessible.

"Our mantra is to prepare the students here for the world."
Perkins Superintendent Ed Bosso

"Our mantra is to prepare the students here for the world," he said. "We do have students that do coding already, and this is a great opportunity to dispel myths, maybe, about what blind people can and can't do."

Teaching kids coding in an accessible way

Perkins School for the Blind will implement the Everyone Can Code curriculum next school year. The program works with VoiceOver, a screen-reading technology for those who are blind or low-vision, to teach kids how to code step-by-step, without them ever needing to see the screen.

Perkins School for the Blind is teaming up with Apple to teach visually impaired kids how to code. ISTOCK

Giving this skill to Perkins students will hopefully allow them to create their own solutions, Bosso noted, to the unique challenges that the blind community faces — and which other people in the tech world may not be working on.

"Our students access the world in ways we can't imagine, using tools we can't even think about because it's not in our nature," he said. "When you think about advances made in autonomous vehicles, artificial intelligence, Aira — there are so many technologies that we want our students to be on the forefront of, not only as consumers, but as advisers." Four penguin chicks make debut at New England Aquarium

The four little blue penguin chicks hatched about three months ago and are ready to join the New England Aquarium's penguin exhibit.

kristin.toussaint@metro.us

Four new members of the New England Aquarium penguin family have made their first public debut.

The little blue penguin chicks — named Goose, Wedge, Derwent and Miramar — made their on-exhibit entrance last Thursday morning after having hatched about 80 days ago.

They've already grown to nearly the size of adult blue penguins since "birds grow outrageously fast," the aquarium noted in a statement, but they're still pretty small. In fact, little blue penguins are the smallest penguin species in the world, and are found in Australia and New Zealand. These new chicks were named after places where you can find little blue penguins in Australia.

"The chicks are now ready to take their place on exhibit, and quite literally find their place in their pecking order."

The New England Aquarium, in a statement

These chicks' parents have also recently returned to the penguin exhibit in the center of the New England Aquarium over the past few weeks.

In the months since hatching, the chicks' fluffy down has been replaced by waterproof feathers, and they've learned how to be hand-fed by the aquarium's penguin staff.

"The chicks are now ready to take their place on exhibit," the aquarium said in a statement, "and quite literally find their place in their pecking order."

Little blue penguin chicks made their on-exhibit debut at the New England Aquarium on May 17. PROVIDED BY NEW ENGLAND AQUARIUM

The New England Aquarium has nearly 100 penguins of three different species. Little blue penguins stand out not just because of their small size, but because of their color. Instead of being black and white like most other penguins, little blue penguins are a grayish blue.

As these four little blue chicks get used to the exhibit, more babies may be joining them soon — African penguin couples are currently in the aquarium basement preparing to hatch their own chicks.

Dana-Farber Wants You to Know the Signs and Symptoms of Testicular Cancer

Testicular cancer occurs when abnormal cells in one or both of the testes begins to grow uncontrollably. It is the most common type of cancer for younger men between the ages of 15 and 40, with the average age at diagnosis just 33.

Risk factors for developing testicular cancer include having an undescended testicle, having abnormal development of the testicles, a personal history of testicular cancer, family history of testicular cancer (especially in a father or brother), and being white. Fortunately, it is one of the most curable types of cancers when caught early.

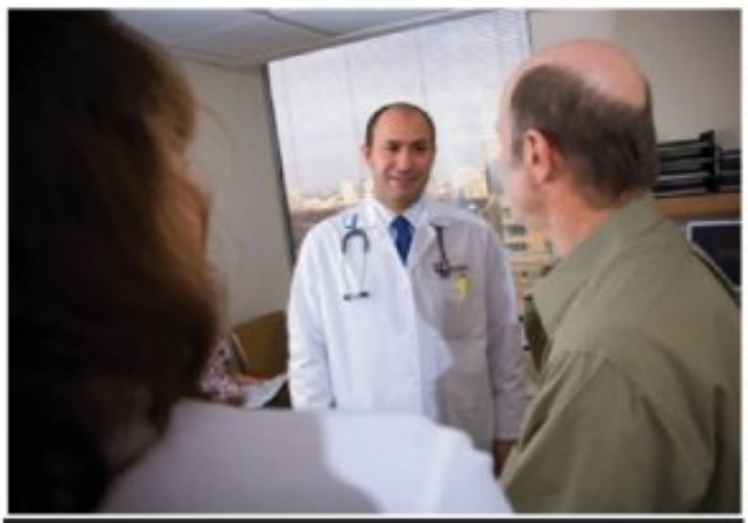
What are signs and symptoms of testicular cancer?

Signs and symptoms of testicular cancer include pain or discomfort in a testicle or in the scrotum, a dull ache in the lower abdomen or groin, a painless lump or swelling in either testicle, sudden build-up of swelling in the scrotum, and back pain.

How do you diagnose testicular cancer?

Testicular cancer is usually diagnosed with a testicular exam, a blood test for tumor markers, and an ultrasound (which is quick and painless). Regular self-exams are also an important step in catching testicular cancer early.

Once diagnosed, a urologist will order a CT scan to determine if the cancer has spread beyond the testicle in a process known as staging. Stage I means that the scan does not show any evidence of cancer beyond the testicle; stage II means that the scan has identified cancer that has spread beyond the testicle to the lymph nodes in the abdomen; and stage III means that the cancer has spread beyond the cancer and abdominal lymph nodes to additional areas of the body.



Toni Choueiri, MD, Director of the Lank Center for Genitourinary Oncology at Dana-Farber Cancer Institute.

How do you treat testicular cancer?

The treatment approach to testicular cancer depends on the type – seminomas or non-seminomas – and whether or not the cancer has spread beyond the testicle. Surgery to remove the testicle, called inguinal orchiectomy, is the most common treatment for testicular cancer. Surgery cures most patients, but some patients may undergo chemotherapy or radiation treatment to kill any remaining cancer cells after the operation.

Although men can maintain fertility with one testicle, chemotherapy and radiation may temporarily or permanently reduce sperm count. In this case, patients interested in biologically having a child can consider sperm banks to store their sperm. Furthermore, the removal of a testicle does not affect the ability to have an erection. In fact, the vast majority of men with testicular cancer have it in only on testicle, so after surgery the remaining testicle produces all of the needed hormones that affect masculinity including hair growth, voice, and sex drive.

Feast on Nashville hot chicken sandwiches and more American-style comfort food.

Backyard Betty's has a '70s and '80s retro vibe with a dash of modern flair.

Enjoy cookout classics and a retro vibe at this Southie restaurant

You can dig in to classic cookout fare without the hassle of firing up your own grill at this new restaurant located in Southie.

Located at 170 W. Broadway St. in South Boston, the recently opened Backyard Betty's provides a stylishly retro vibe while serving up a menu of elevated, American comfort food. Since everyone loves a good cookout, the team behind the new bar and grill wanted to bring the beloved backyard concept into a restaurant setting.

"The idea of a cookout is that gathering you don't want to miss," says general manager PJ Crowley, while fondly recalling his early days of living in Southie and grilling on his rooftop during wild snowstorms. "If you miss going to that concert with your friends or you miss that night at the bar, those things will happen again. But if you miss that cookout at your aunt's or friend's house, you just have FOMO."

Executive chef Jeff Howe has created a lineup of delicious cookout-style dishes ranging from wings and burgers to Nashville hot chicken sandwiches and steak tips. Other menu highlights include barbecue mainstays like brisket and pulled pork, as well as nachos, an array of wood-grilled pizzas and other bar bite favorites.

Crowley, along with Island Creek Oyster Bar and Yvonne's alum Will Piquette, have put together a fun drink program featuring more than a dozen domestic and craft beers on draft, plus several tasty cocktail options and large format drinks. Backyard Betty's even has its own signature draft cocktail, the Back Porch Sweet Tea, as well as a trio of boozy milkshakes, including one that's dubbed the Martin and Lewis, an homage to the $5 shake from "Pulp Fiction."

The layout and décor is just as fun and funky as the menu at Backyard Betty's. The 5,300-square-foot space offers a '70s and '80s retro feel with a dash of modern flair.

All kinds of pop art can be found throughout the restaurant, even on the bathroom floor, which features a custom-designed throwback sticker collage. Backyard Betty's also has a pair of Pac-Man arcade games, a collection of retro-fitted vintage televisions and a 42-foot custom bar that evokes an Airstream trailer feel with it's aluminum covered siding.

Dubbed "Pop's Garage," a second, 10-seat bar is located near the dining room area. Featuring a motor city theme thanks to its reclaimed garage doors and other auto-inspired décor, the space can be reserved for groups of up to 20.

Between the food and nostalgia-driven design, Crowley hopes everyone who walks into Backyard Betty's can feel at home.

"I want there to be a connection that the bartender or the server can have with the guest," he says. "I want the neighborhood to embrace us as much as we embrace them." MATT JUUL

'The Toys That Made Us' returns for a second nostalgia-filled season

Take another trip down memory lane with the popular Netflix series.

ANDREW HUSBAND
letters@metro.us

Toys are more than just kid stuff. NETFLIX

In December, the documentary series "The Toys That Made Us" surprised critics and Netflix subscribers with just how great it was.

They were probably expecting a show about the toys that helped shape American popular culture to be nothing more than a historical recounting with talking heads, but that is precisely what it is not. On Friday, a second season will debut brand-new episodes detailing the stories behind four more toy lines, and their significance these past few decades.

Created by Brian Volk-Weiss, who is best known for his work at Comedy Dynamics, the company responsible for some of the best stand-up comedy specials in recent years, "The Toys That Made Us" is just one of Netflix's many attempts to dominate its catalog with original programming. And judging by how well-received the first season was by critics and viewers alike, that four more episodes are about to drop should come as no surprise.

The first season began with a bang over the winter with episodes dedicated to the Star Wars, Barbie, He-Man and G.I. Joe toy lines. Rather than simply sticking to a chronological retelling of how they were made, however, "The Toys That Made Us" focuses on both their history and their pop cultural significance. Hence why the very first entry dives into the story of Lucasfilm's decision to have the small Kenner toy company produce its first Star Wars toys.

Season 2 adds four more episodes about some of the most popular toys ever made later this week. This time around, the show delves into the respective worlds of the LEGO, Transformers and Star Trek toy lines, as well as a Hello Kitty episode, which will finally internationalize the series as its subject hails from Japan.

All four episodes of "The Toys That Made Us" Season 2 will begin streaming Friday on Netflix. You can easily get by watching these new episodes if you haven't seen the first four yet. But if you want a taste of what to expect come Friday, however, you can binge-watch Season 1 right now.

9 Things you should know before upgrading your kitchen

Remodel your kitchen the right way.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Nothing is worse than moving into a home with a lousy kitchen. Many people will avoid moving in if they think it doesn't cut the mustard, while many choose to make upgrades to build the kitchen of their dreams. It can be done! However, there are a few things you should know before upgrading your kitchen. Luckily, Home Depot is here to help. Here are few helpful tips for your next kitchen remodel …

Upgrade to the kitchen of your dreams. GETTY IMAGES

1 Does your kitchen have enough space for your new appliances?

You may have your eyes set on a certain sleek refrigerator or washer and dryer that would bring your kitchen into the modern era. But if you do not have the space to accompany these new units. Make sure that you thoroughly take inventory of the space available in your kitchen before attempting to install them. You could wind up cutting down your cooking wiggle room down considerably and setting off a claustrophobic reaction the next time you try to host Thanksgiving dinner.

2 How to remove your old kitchen faucet

Much to your dismay, removing a kitchen faucet isn't really as simple as unscrewing it from your sink and putting in the brand-new one. As it turns out, there is a little bit more that goes into it than that and you should really know how to do it before you find yourself and the rest of your kitchen covered with water.

First thing is first, you should turn off the water supply to your kitchen sink. There should be a tiny little valve next to each of the pipes running up to the faucet underneath the cabinet that houses your entire sink. Once that has been turned off, put a cloth up to the drain opening and place a bucket underneath the sink inside the cabinet so that you can catch any water that will come out as a result of the pressure being released from turning off the valve.

Next, take an adjustable wrench and wiggle the hot water and cold water lines from the sink. The nuts keeping the faucet in place will probably be stuck due to years of activity, so use some penetrating spray to wipe away the grime left behind. Once you have removed them, you are free to pull your old faucet head off of the sink and get ready to install your shiny new one.

3 Installing kitchen cabinets the right way

Having the right amount of cabinets to hang over your kitchen counter is a great way to store all of your essentials. It definitely beats having your dishes piled up in a drying rack next to your sink. But before you install your cabinets, there are a few things you should know before drilling them into your walls.

First, you should use a stud finder to locate the studs in your walls. If your home has wooden studs, drilling into them will give more support than simply drilling your cabinets into drywall. However if you have steel studs, you will need to avoid them as they will destroy your screws. In either case, you should mark on your wall where the studs are located.

Next, you should measure the dimensions of your cabinets and mark on your wall where you would like the base and the height to be on your walls. Using a level — with a piece of wood as a guide — mark your walls with exactly where the cabinets should sit against your walls. Once you have plotted this out, you are ready to start drilling.

LeBron James powers past Greg Monroe in Game 2. GETTY IMAGES

LEBRON THE BEAST OR LEBRON THE QUITTER?

OPINION

MATT BURKE

Matt Burke is the Executive Sports Editor and a columnist at Metro US. Follow him on Twitter @burke_metro

We've been here before with LeBron.

In the 2012 playoffs, LeBron's Heat had lost the first two games they played at TD Garden and the Celtics had done a good job of at least containing the best player in basketball early in the series.

Then, in Game 6 — he went off.

LeBron shot 19-of-26 from the field in 45 minutes played, finishing the game with a whopping 45 points and giving the Heat a decisive 98-79 victory. Miami went on to win the series in seven.

He's not as spry as he was six years ago, but LeBron already has two 40-plus point games in this series against the Celtics. He's averaging 32.0 points per game against the C's through the first five games of this series.

The narrative that the Celtics are doing a pretty good job on him defensively is mostly true, though. LeBron averaged 34.0 points per game in the Cavs' sweep over the Raptors in Round 2 and he averaged 34.4 points per game in the Cavs' seven game series against the Pacers in Round 1. Relatively speaking, the Celtics are doing fine on Bron Bron with that 32 per game average.

That Pacers series should be something of a model for the Celtics, although the difference here is that the Celtics have home court advantage — while the Pacers did not heading into that series. Indiana lost that Game 7 in Cleveland, 105-101.

If this series goes seven games (and it likely will), Game 7 would be at the Garden — where all bets are off.

LeBron has become a master of conserving his energy this postseason, and has been shown to take certain games off if things aren't going well early. It happened in Game 1 against the Celtics in this series, and it happened in Game 6 of the Pacers series in Cleveland. LeBron played just 31 minutes in that 121-87 blowout loss to the Pacers, and he scored just 22 points — his low for that series.

Similarly, people have also started to accuse certain NBA coaches — including Brad Stevens — of throwing in the towel early if a certain game is going to be just too tough to win. The idea is to save your best tricks for a game that's more likely to go in your favor (i.e. a home game).

Al Horford (30 minutes) and Jayson Tatum (31 minutes) were the only Celtics to play over 30 minutes in the Game 3 blowout loss in Cleveland and the C's had three bench players log more than 20 minutes in that game. In other words, they got punched in the mouth early and then decided it would be too difficult to waste valuable energy in trying to pull off an improbable road win.

But tonight's game is back home. Back at the Garden, where it will be rip-roaring loud.

The Celtics know they have to get this game tonight, or they are cooked. Conversely, the Cavs can afford an "L" here, with Game 6 in Cleveland set for Friday night.

These aren't ideal circumstances for either team — but it is what it is at this stage of the game.

Dicey Price-y

David Price has actually pitched quite well since his carpal tunnel issue, having given up just two earned runs in a Sox win over Toronto on May 12 and having given up just two earned runs to Baltimore last week. Price starts tonight at Tampa Bay (7 p.m., NESN).

Terry Rozier has been lights-out at TD Garden this postseason. GETTY IMAGES

Garden version of Rozier needed

Can the Celtics PG keep his home success rolling?

JAMES TOSCANO
sports@metro.us

In many ways, Terry Rozier is this season's Boston Celtics team personified.

He's taken the opportunity presented to him due to injuries to his teammates and really run with it, proving a good amount of people wrong along the way.

Rozier went from a relatively unknown guard in the NBA to one that many now feel can start on NBA teams today — and there are a number of playoff games that would prove that point.

Take Game 2 of the Eastern Conference Finals in Boston, for example, when "Scary Terry" sparked the C's second-half run with 14 points in the third quarter, of which he played all 12 minutes of.

His lightning-in-a-bottle offense has been something the Celtics have counted on in big moments during this playoff run.

But one thing Celtics fans have probably also noticed is that while Rozier has shown the ability to carry the team offensively at times, it's not consistent enough. And like many of his teammates, the production has dropped off on the road during this postseason, where the Celtics are just 1-6.

Check out the home and road splits: At home, Rozier is averaging 20.0 points on 46.2 percent from the field, including 45.5 percent from 3-point range. On the road, those numbers fall to 13.3 points per game on 36.0-percent shooting including 25.9-percent from 3.

Looking at the Game 4 box score, you'd see Rozier finished with 16 points, 11 assists, and 6 rebounds. Not bad at all.

It was what the Cavs were doing to Rozier when they were on offense that was really hurting, though. Celtics head coach Brad Stevens has assembled a strong defensive team that has switched defenders on opponents with much success this year. In Game 4, though, it became obvious that Cavs head coach Tyronn Lue was targeting Rozier on the defensive end, creating mismatches with LeBron James, Kevin Love, and even Tristan Thompson.

"We want to have the movement," Lue said. "We want to try to take advantage of mismatches and Rozier is a tough fighter, tough competitor, but if you try to get switches, I guess he's the one you want to get with Kevin [Love] and [James], because those other four guys are the same size, they're strong, they're physical."

So how do the Celtics counter it? That's a job for Stevens to figure out over the next couple days.

The C's need Rozier's offense, so cutting his minutes down isn't a viable option. They could move him to the bench and start Marcus Smart, who is a bigger body and better defender. But eventually Rozier will be out there in important minutes looking to score.

It will come down to Boston hedging on and fighting through screens, rotating with more purpose, and working to make things difficult again back at home where they haven't lost yet this postseason.

The Celtics aren't where they are today without an effective Rozier. His play over the next couple games could determine their plans for June.

Aries Keep a low profile. Put your energy into something that you know will make a difference. Sit tight and don't make personal changes until you have investigated your options.

Taurus You've got all the right moves if you stay calm and execute your intentions in a steady and knowledgeable manner. Taking on too much and will harm your objective.

Gemini A business trip or conference call will help you better understand what's expected of you. Doing research and talking to experts will help you to fulfill your promises.

Cancer A new look will lift your spirits. You can sign a contract, make a personal commitment and alter your current home life to better suit your needs. Romance is highlighted.

Leo Collaborate with people who keep up with new concepts, technology and information, but don't force yourself to think the same way. Avoid indulgence and overreacting.

Virgo A meeting will help you understand what's going on. Talk to an expert or someone close to you who has valuable information. Express your thoughts and feelings.

Libra Work alone or keep what you are doing a secret. It's best not to present what you are working on until everything is in place. Handle domestic problems pragmatically.

Scorpio Do what you can to help out, but don't force your will on anyone. Listen to others and understand their problems, and offer suggestions. Personal improvements are encouraged.

Sagittarius Don't be too quick to share your feelings. Someone will use personal information against you to make you look bad. Make finishing what you start your priority.

Capricorn A change will do you good. Visit someone you find interesting and discuss matters that will help clear up any uncertainty you've been feeling.

Aquarius Channel your energy into making physical improvements at home. Don't get into a scuffle with someone over something you cannot change.

Pisces Emotional misunderstandings are likely to develop if you aren't forthright about your feelings or are dealing with someone evasive. Be direct and ask questions. EUGENIA LAST
